List new courses required for the new or revised curriculum. How do they support the overall program objectives of the major/minor/concentrations)?

(Be aware that approval of the curriculum is dependent upon these courses successfully passing through the Course Challenge list. If there are no new courses enter "None")

ENGL 101—Tools of Textual Analysis

ENGL 102—Texts in Time

A gateway course (101: Tools of Textual Analysis) will introduce students to basic concepts of literary analysis and teach them how to write in the discipline. This course is a prerequisite for nearly all English courses. It is part of our new First Year Experience, linked to E110, with the professor teaching both 101 and 110. A second course (102: Texts in Time) will give students the opportunity to explore how texts reflect the cultures that create them by examining a specific historical context. This course will be taught in small sections, with intensive writing and the chance to develop analytical skills necessary in advanced courses. These two introductory courses are required of all majors; after that, students will all declare a concentration. While the requirements for each concentration vary, on the whole our majors will then enter into a sequence of historical survey courses covering British and American literature. Thus, most of our students will be taking the same courses their first two years, and these courses will systematically lay the foundation for skills and historical knowledge upon which subsequent courses will be based. Having taken a sequence of courses together, students can then (in their junior and senior years) develop and pursue their own specialized intellectual interests, since most courses after that will be electives. In order to be able to offer English courses to non-majors, there will be a separate track of courses which do not require 101 as a prerequisite.

Explain, when appropriate, how this new/revised curriculum supports the 10 goals of undergraduate education: <http://www.ugs.udel.edu/gened/>

All English courses involve extensive reading, research, critical thinking, discussion, and writing. We work to maintain class sizes that facilitate review and feedback of written assignments, and we make assignments that demand advanced thinking skills: problem solving, interpretation, and theoretically-informed reading. English classes in general attend to diverse literatures, examining how the production, dissemination, reception, and disposition of texts are influenced by literary, historical, cultural, and ethnic contexts. Many classes involve active learning through service learning, independent research, internships, study abroad, and other experiences that enlarge students' perspectives of the world beyond the classroom. Our current curricular revisions are intended to make our courses more representative of diverse cultures and to insure that students have outcomes we expect: exceptionally strong reading and research skills, the ability to articulate compelling arguments, and the ability to produce expert writing.

Identify other units affected by the proposed changes:

(Attach permission from the affected units. If no other unit is affected, enter "None")

None.

Describe the rationale for the proposed program change(s):

(Explain your reasons for creating, revising, or deleting the curriculum or program.)

We are changing our curriculum and its concentrations in major ways in response to our APR. In the new gateway courses to the major, part of a strong FYE, students will develop reading, writing, and interpretive skills important to all successive courses. Our new curriculum will allow more freedom of electives across concentrations, rationalizing course numbering and prerequisites, making fewer requirements within specific historical periods, and generally updating the program. We are creating new internship courses and undergraduate research courses and providing more opportunities to work in global and multicultural literature. We are redesigning our courses in grammar, style, and rhetoric and modifying our capstone experience to best use our resources for a meaningful senior year experience, including mentored research, internships, student teaching, and seminars.

Program Requirements:

(Show the new or revised curriculum as it should appear in the Course Catalog. If this is a revision, be sure to indicate the changes being made to the current curriculum and include a side-by-side comparison of the credit distribution before and after the proposed change.)
